Building a Technologically Advanced Armed Forces is Our Goal: Rajnath SinghIndia Targets 3 Lakh Crore Defence Production and 50,000 Crore Exports by 2029

New Delhi, TRINET NEWS, November 03:
Union Defence Minister Rajnath Singh reaffirmed the Central Government's commitment to strengthening India's Armed Forces with advanced technologies to effectively address present and future security challenges. He chaired a meeting of the Ministry of Defence Consultative Committee on the theme "Modernisation of India's Defence Forces" in Jaisalmer, Rajasthan, on Tuesday.The meeting held extensive discussions on evolving warfare strategies, emerging security threats, integration of advanced weapon systems, coordination among the three Armed Forces and indigenous defence manufacturing. The importance of incorporating Artificial Intelligence (AI), autonomous systems, unmanned platforms, cyber capabilities, space technologies and electronic warfare systems into military operations was highlighted.Rajnath Singh stated that the defence budget for the financial year 2026–27 had been increased to a record ?7.85 lakh crore, including ?2.19 lakh crore allocated for modernisation and capital acquisitions. He emphasised the need for efficient utilisation of funds while prioritising the operational requirements of the Armed Forces.Highlighting India's progress towards self-reliance in defence manufacturing, the Minister said that domestic defence production had increased from ?46,429 crore in 2014–15 to 1.78 lakh crore in 2025–26. Defence exports, which were below ?2,000 crore in 2014, have risen to approximately ?40,000 crore. The Government aims to achieve defence production worth 3 lakh crore and exports worth 50,000 crore by 2029.The Minister appreciated the Defence ResearchandDevelopmentOrganisation (DRDO) for its significant contribution to developing advanced weapons, missiles and defence systems. He said the Government was encouraging private sector participation, ranging from Micro, Smalland Medium Enterprises (MSMEs) to major industries, to strengthen indigenous defence capabilities.He stressed the importance of greater cooperation among the Armed Forces, research institutions, public sector undertakings, private industries and academic institutions to accelerate technological innovation and defence preparedness.Rajnath Singh observed that military strength depends not only on advanced technology and financial resources but also on the professional skills, operational readiness and preparedness of personnel. He said the three Armed Forces were continuously restructuring and upgrading their capabilities to meet changing warfare requirements. He also referred to the Indian Army's newly established Ashni, Bhairav and Shaktibaan platoons as examples of adaptation to contemporary operational challenges.The Defence Minister clarified that modernisation was not merely about acquiring new weapons but also about developing sustainable indigenous capabilities. He emphasised reducing strategic dependence on foreign suppliers by promoting domestic research, innovation and industrial partnerships.During the meeting, members of the Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha offered several suggestions regarding defence modernisation. Discussions focused on prioritising critical capabilities, accelerating procurement and development processes, and regularly reviewing progress towards established objectives.Minister of State for Defence Sanjay Seth, Defence Secretary Rajesh Kumar Singh and senior civilian and military officials attended the meeting.

Aditya-L1 Reveals New Insights into Solar Eruptions

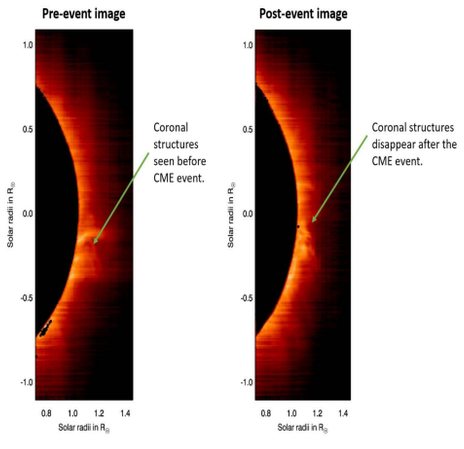

VELC Detects Asymmetric Expansion of Coronal Mass Ejections; Findings Could Improve Space Weather Forecasting

New Delhi, TRINET NEWS, November 03:

India's first space-based solar observatory, Aditya-L1, has revealed significant new insights into the behaviour of Coronal Mass Ejections (CMEs), massive eruptions of plasma from the Sun. Scientists have discovered that these eruptions may expand asymmetrically rather than uniformly, offering valuable information for improving space weather predictions.Researchers from the Indian Institute of Astrophysics (IIA) conducted the study using observations from Aditya-L1's Visible Emission Line Coronagraph (VELC), NASA's Solar Dynamics Observatory and advanced three-dimensional modelling. The findings were published in The Astrophysical Journal Letters.The research focused on a CME that erupted near the Sun's western limb on August 5, 2024. While NASA's observations captured its movement across the sky, VELC provided crucial information about hot plasma moving towards and away from the observer.VELC monitors plasma in the Sun's outer atmosphere, known as the corona, at temperatures approaching 1.8 million Kelvin. By analysing wavelength shifts in green light emitted by highly ionised iron at 530.3 nanometres, scientists measured plasma velocities.Researchers found that conventional models assuming uniform expansion could not accurately reproduce the observations. However, a three-dimensional model incorporating a tilted CME axis and asymmetric lateral expansion closely matched the recorded data.Study co-author Jayant Joshi explained that asymmetric expansion could influence interactions with solar wind, affecting eruption speeds and arrival times near Earth.Such findings could strengthen forecasting of space weather events that may disrupt satellites, communication networksandnavigationsystems.Developed by IIA with ISRO's support, VELC will enable further investigationsintosolareruptions.ResearchersSaurabhTripathi,Tanmoy Samanta and their colleagues contributed to the study, which highlights India's growing capabilities in advanced solar research.

From Farming Family to Overseas Education: Aarav’s Inspiring Journey

National Overseas Scholarship Supports Master's Degree in Artificial Intelligence at Monash University, Australia

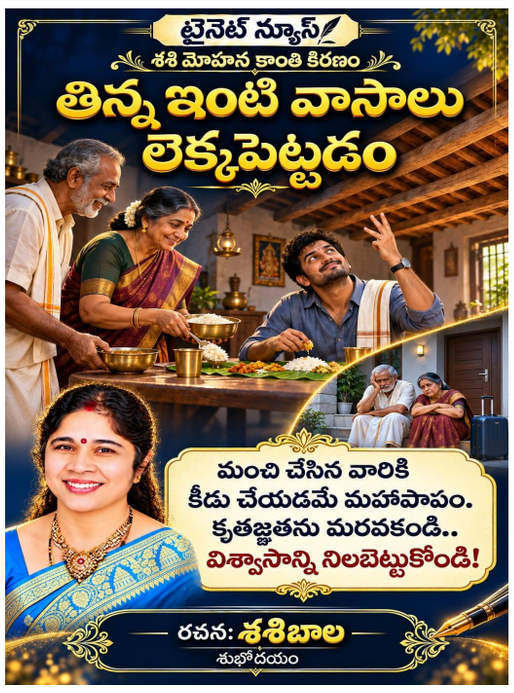

New Delhi, TRINET NEWS, November 03:

The National Overseas Scholarship (NOS) has helped 26-year-old Aarav Mane (name changed), from a rural farming family, fulfil his dream of pursuing higher education in Australia.Belonging to a Scheduled Caste agricultural family with limited financial resources, Aarav faced significant challenges in financing his Master's degree in Artificial Intelligence at Monash University.Despite financial difficulties and limited access to international education guidance, Aarav remained determined to build a career as an Artificial Intelligence engineer.His financial burden increased when university tuition fees rose during subsequent semesters, alongside accommodation, living and educational expenses.However, financial assistance under the National Overseas Scholarship for 2024–2026 helped cover tuition fees, living expenses and other academic costs, enabling him to continue his studies without imposing an unbearable burden on his family.Studying at Monash University provided opportunities to acquire advanced technical skills, gain international exposure and develop professional expertise.Aarav's journey highlights how government scholarship programmes can empower talented students from economically disadvantaged communities, overcome financial barriers and create opportunities for international higher education and successful careers.

Counting the Rafters of the House That Fed You A Reflection on Ingratitude, Betrayal and the Value of Loyalty

TRINET NEWS | SHASHIMOHANA KANTHI KIRANAM

By ShashibalaThe Telugu proverb “Thinna Inti Vasalu Lekk pettadam” (Counting the Rafters of the House That Fed You) highlights the painful realities of ingratitude,selfishnessand betrayalin society.In ancient times, generous families offered food and shelter to people in distress. However, some ungratefulindividuals,instead of appreciating their kindness, plotted to harm their benefactors.Unfortunately, such behaviour continues in modernsociety.Someemployees misuse their employers' trust and business secrets for personal gain. Similarly, children sometimes abandon parents who sacrificed everything for their education and success.In politics, certain individuals betray the leaders and organisations that helped them gain recognition and positions.Selfishness, jealousy and greed are the primary causes of such behaviour. Betrayal not only damages relationships but also destroys mutual trust within society.Evenanimalsdemonstrate gratitude towards those who feed them, yet humans sometimes betray thosewhohelped them prosper.Trust, loyalty and gratitude are essential foundations of humanity. Everyone mustremember and respect those who supported them during difficult times.Never betray those who helped you succeed. Gratitude builds relationships, while betrayaldestroysthem.

Power Supply Restored Within 4–5 Days After Cyclones: CM Chandrababu Naidu

Effective Planning and Coordination Helped Minimise Losses During Cyclones Arnab and Murasu

Amaravati, TRINET NEWS, November 03:

Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N. Chandrababu Naidu stated that the government effectively handled the devastation caused by successive cyclones, preventing loss of life and minimising property damage through advance planning and coordinated relief operations.Addressing a press conference at the Real-Time Governance Society (RTGS) Centre in Amaravati, the Chief Minister said the government focused on three key priorities: Rescue, Relief and Rehabilitation.He explained that continuous monitoring of cyclone movements, wind speeds, rainfall and flood risks helped authorities implement timely preventive measures.Using RTGS and the AWARE system, officials analysed real-time data and identified vulnerable villages and flood-prone areas. Chandrababu said nearly 90 per cent of the government's forecasts proved accurate.The cyclones severely damaged electricity infrastructure, uprooting approximately 31,000 electric poles and disrupting power supply in 4,095 villages and 548 substations.Although restoration was initially expected to take at least 20 days, coordinated efforts enabled substantial power restoration within four to five days.The Chief Minister appreciated electricity department personnel for working continuously despite heavy rainfall and dangerous conditions. Damaged poles were replaced, fallen trees removed and drilling machinery deployed to accelerate restoration.He emphasised that advanced technology, timely planning and coordination among departments played a crucial role in restoring normalcy across cyclone-affected areas.According to the Chief Minister, the government's advance planning and coordinated response helped accelerate recovery in cyclone-affected areas, while electricity personnel worked under difficult conditions to restore essential services

Ponguleti recalled that state-level meetings were conducted in Hyderabad during April and May to review departmental performance and pending issues across erstwhile districts.

He emphasised that the current reviews would assess the implementation of earlier decisions, progress achieved at the field level and unresolved public grievances.

“The objective of these reviews is not merely to identify problems but to ensure their effective resolution,” the Minister stated.

He stressed that improved coordination among departments and greater accessibility of officials would help deliver government services more efficiently and promptly to the people.
