Holding Leaves After Burning One's Hands

Prevention Is Better Than Regret

TRINETNEWS – Shashimohana Kanthi Kiranam

The Telugu proverb “Chethulu KalinakaAakulu Pattukunnatlu” (Holding Leaves After Burning One's Hands) highlights the importance of timely action, precaution and responsibility.

Taking corrective measures after serious damage has occurred often serves little purpose. Time and opportunities, once lost, cannot always be recovered.

In ancient times, people used leaves to handle hot cooking vessels. However, searching for leaves after burning one's hands could not prevent the injury.

This proverb applies to everyday life. Students who neglect studies throughout the year cannot expect excellent results through last-minutepreparation. Similarly, people who ignore healthy habits may face serious health problems later.Those who spend money carelessly often regret not saving during financial emergencies.The lesson also applies to governments. Repairing drainage systems before the monsoon is more effective than launching rescue operations after floods cause devastation.

Likewise, protecting forests and preventing pollution today is better than struggling with environmental disasters tomorrow.

Proper planning, financial savings, insurance and responsible decisions can protect families from unexpected difficulties.

*Life teaches us that prevention is always wiser than regret. Acting at the right time is the foundation of success and security.

Good Morning!
